Teresa,

You have just sent me a combative email, and I will not work with you if you are combative.

You say, "stop playing games" as if to suggest one, I am playing a game, and two that I know of the game you think I am playing.

We are supposed to be working together collaboratively. Your tone in this email is unacceptable.

So what does collaboration mean:

- 1) If you have a problem with something, do as you did, include everyone in the inquiry about the problem.
- 2) But clarify your problem as detailed as possible. So in this case, what document are you referencing? What mission statement? Please clarify. Then we can fix the problem.
- 3) Do not approach anyone on the PPC (the board) in such a finger-pointing way again, otherwise our efforts will not work. When you pronounce a claim like this it insinuates mistrust for some people who are less tactful, they will pick up on this lack of trust and cause the group even more confusion and trouble. This is unacceptable.

CONCLUSION:

You've identified a problem -- there exists a mission statement which mistakenly may not have the interests of businesses listed. But, we don't know what document are you referencing?

Is it a readily fixable oversight, and can it be changed easily? Seems like the answer is yes.

So we can fix it.

I'm willing to continue in solidarity and collaboration, not finger pointing and denouncement. Please.

Regards,
Chris
